PREFACE.

The following pages, which the liberality of the Royal Society of Literature has enabled the editor to lay before the public, contain an important and unique addition to the literature of Domesday Book; namely, the Original Return made by the Juratores of the county of Cambridge, in obedience to the Conqueror's mandate, from which the Exchequer Domesday for that county was afterwards compiled by the king's secretaries.

It is much to be regretted that the only manuscript (British Museum, MS. Cotton, Tiberius A. vi.) in which this important document is known to exist has been somewhat injured by time, and above all, has lost several of its leaves. The Return is consequently defective at the end. The greater part, however, has come down to us, and the text, now printed for the first time, and side by side with the similar entries, as they appear in the Exchequer Domesday, contains abundant evidence that we have here before us the original source from which the Exchequer Domesday for that county was derived. It is singular that so important a document should have hitherto been extant only in a solitary manuscript, unpublished, and exposed in consequence to many risks of being lost or destroyed. Doubtless, numerous historical and literary treasures still exist among our ancient manuscripts which are unknown to students or antiquarians. But in regard to this particular manuscript, the strange fact is that from the days of Selden to those of Ellis, its existence had been known, and its importance as elucidating Domesday history understood, in part at least, and acknowledged; or, to put it in another way, that portion of the manuscript containing the Inquisitio Eliensis, or description of the monastic lands of Ely, had been quoted over and over again, and was at last printed in the Domesday Book, ed. Ellis, vol. iii. pp. 497–528, 1816, while the still more important portion, containing the description of the lay as well as the ecclesiastical lands, has been overlooked and actually omitted from Ellis's folio edition of the Domesday Book, although in the manuscript it occupies the folios adjacent to the Inquisitio Eliensis.

While, therefore, the present editor does not pretend to have discovered this important fragment, he may perhaps be allowed to say that he is the first to bring its importance to light and to give it to the learned world. It is, indeed, doubtful whether any previous Domesday student had distinguished between the Inquisitio Comitatus Cantabrigiensis (pp. 1–96) and the Inquisitio Eliensis, pp. 97–167, or saw that the one half was a copy of the original Domesday return, as made by the Juratores, upon the Conqueror's order, while the other merely contained a record of the lands belonging to the monks of Ely, described there as the lands of St. Aeðelðryð, the foundress of the nunnery at Ely in the seventh century.

The Inquisitio Eliensis, although to be found in the third volume of Ellis's edition of the Domesday Book, has been reprinted in the present volume with numerous and important collations from the Cambridge MSS., O. 2, 41, and O. 2, 1, not only to preserve curious and multiform variations in names of persons and places, and in ambiguous contractions and abbreviations, but also for the amendment of the text itself; as for instance, at p. 112, line 5, where, misled by the repetition of the name Harduuinus, two whole sentences have been omitted from Ellis's text manuscript; and again at p. 137, line 5, where a like omission may be noticed.

Selden appears to be the first writer who refers to the manuscript; but he was not writing the history of the Domesday Book, and we may perhaps thus account for the imperfect conception he seems to have had of the true character, and his failure to realize the exact nature of the record before him. The passage in which he refers to the MS. occurs in his preface to Eadmer, Op. omn. vol. ii. Col. 1596, "Atqui ad hanc rem multo accuratius (sed in censu Capitum etiam hallucinatus) autor Anonymus vetusti Codicis MS. qui Breviarium est villarum et fundorum quorum proprietarii tunc erant Antistes et Sodales Eliensis. . . . . Ita autem Anonymus ille, nec ipso censu, ni fallor, recentior, uti etiam suadent ipsarum literarum ductus. . . . Quin discrepat saepius ipse census ab eo qui in tabulis illis Guilielmianis quarum fides omni exceptione planissime major est. Animalium autem numerus, Pecuniæ æstimatio, aut Capitum census (alius quàm quo servi et clientes censiti) non omninò in his reperitur." Selden, it will be seen, formed an imperfect estimate both of the age and of the value of the manuscript before him.

After Selden comes Roger Gale. He had met with the manuscript in the famous collection of Sir Robert Cotton, to which it had now found its way; and in the Registrum Honoris de Richmond, App. p. 5, Lond. 1722, having occasion to describe the method pursued in the compilation of the Domesday Book, he quotes the opening sentences of the Inquisitio Eliensis:

"Nunc audi quomodo Liber ipse (Domesday) collectus et digestus fuit, quod me docet vetus Registrum [in Biblioth. Cotton, Tib. A. vi.] quod contuli Roberto Cotton Equiti aurato, antiquitatum nostrarum acerrimo indagatori. Hic subscribitur Inquisitio terrarum, quomodo Barones Regis, etc. . . . . In Odeseio hundreto . . . . his hundretis juraverunt."

After Gale, the next intelligent student of the MS., so far as appears, was Philip Carteret Webb, Solicitor to the Treasury. In 1756 Webb published a curious little tractate, entitled 'A Short Account of some Particulars concerning Domesday Book with a view to promote its being published.' At page 9 of the 'Short Account,' he refers to the manuscript as having been seen by Selden and Gale, makes extracts from it in reference to the manor of Wimple, and then, going on to describe the compilation of Domesday Book with this manuscript still before him, he says, (p. 10): "Some of the Particulars the jury were charged to inquire of, were thought unnecessary to be inserted in the two volumes, framed out of the returns, which will account for the different descriptions different writers give of the contents of this survey, some of them saying it contained an account of every particular the jury were charged to inquire of, and others, more correctly, confining it to such things only as were extracted from the returns, and transcribed into the work in question."

In succession to Webb comes Robert Kelham, the meritorious, shall we say, famous author of 'Domesday Book Illustrated,' 1788. I am not certain, notwithstanding the learning and industry so conspicuous in Kelham's work, whether he had really examined MS. Cotton Tiberius A. vi. for himself, or whether, like Morant, he had been tempted to quote at second-hand from Webb. At pp. 12–13, he says, "There is also a MS. copy (of about the time of Henry II.) of the inquisition of the jury, containing their survey for most of the hundreds in Cambridgeshire. Mr. Webb has given an account of so much of it as relates to the manor of Wimple, and from thence it appears the jury set down what all the arable lands in the parish was gelded at, who the owners were, and how many villani, bordarii, cotarii, and servi, were then upon the lands; and that these inquisitions were afterwards sent up to Winchester, and the lands belonging to each great tenant were separated and placed in Domesday, under their respective heads in that county; e.g., The inquisition set forth that Wimple was taxed after the rate of 4 hides; that of those 4 hides, 2 hides and a half and half a virgate belonged to Earl Alan; and that of the same 4 hides, Humphry Dansleville held of Eudo Dapifer 1 hide and 1 virgate and a half; but when we look into Domesday, we shall find, in p. 194, b., that the part which Earl Alan held in Wimple is placed under his lands; and that the remainder of the lands in Wimple is under the title of Eudo Dapifer, p. 197, b.; and that the Inquisition and Domesday agree, except that the sheep, hogs, working horses, and asses, found by the first, are omitted in the survey."

Then follows Sir Henry Ellis, whose 'Introduction to Domesday Book,' and still more his exhaustive indices to the folio edition of the Domesday Book, connect his name for ever with the great work of the Conqueror. Like other inquirers, Ellis has recourse to MS. Cotton, Tiberius A. vi. in order to describe the method pursued in the Conqueror's great compilation, an achievement in its own line worthy of comparison with the Conquest itself in another. However, one is almost compelled to think that Ellis must have quoted at second-hand from Kelham or Webb; for, strange and almost incredible as it seems, he merely prints from the MS.

the comparatively unimportant portion which relates to the monastic lands of Ely, and which will be found in the present volume between pp. 97–167, while he not only omits, but omits without reference or mention, the most valuable portion, now first given to the world. Of this surprising omission there seems to be no explanation except the unsatisfactory one that it was the result of an accident, fatal though the admission be to the completeness of the great Domesday publication. The present editor had the advantage of discussing the matter with Sir Henry Ellis himself, and was informed that the only explanation it was then possible for him to give was this:—that he (Ellis) had directed an amanuensis to transcribe for him whatever related to the Domesday Survey from MS. Tiberius, A. vi., and that the transcriber, by some strange oversight, having omitted the most important portion, Ellis must have supposed that the MS. itself had by that time ceased to contain it, and deferred further inquiry into the matter to a future occasion, which, owing to accident or forgetfulness, never arrived.

The editor may here remark that his attention to this manuscript and its valuable contents was first attracted many years ago during his official connexion with the Department of Manuscripts in the British Museum. He had been requested by the late Sir Frederic Madden, then keeper of the manuscripts, to arrange and where possible to restore to their proper places a considerable number of separate and damaged leaves, which were known to belong to manuscripts in the Cotton collection; and it was while thus employed that he made the discovery of the important nature of the Domesday portion of the manuscript. On ascertaining further that, with the exception of the opening paragraphs, this valuable fragment had never been published, he was urged by Sir Frederic Madden to undertake the editing of it, as no unworthy contribution to the printed literature of Domesday.

It is unnecessary to lengthen this Preface by enlarging on the value and interest of the fragment now published. For all readers having the requisite preparation a cursory inspection will suffice to convince them that it constitutes a real contribution to historical knowledge. The plan adopted of printing in parallel columns the two texts, that of the fragment and that of Domesday, coupled with the addition of elaborate indices, render unneeded a preliminary dissertation in which the differences between them would be brought out. A few examples however are given here to show how the facts recorded in the Domesday Book have been abridged or extended, sometimes imperfectly, from the original return.

In the first page we have "vi. villani et unus presbiter" (Tib.) corresponding to "vii. villani" (Domesday); while the particular tenure explained in the sentence—"Et in hoc manerio fuit quidam sochemannus Godricus homo ejus, potuit dare sine licentia domini sui terram suam tempore regis Edwardi," etc. (Tib.)," is very much abbreviated in the Domesday Book.

On pp. 5–6 the abrupt statement—

"Hæc terra fuit et est de dominio æcclesiæ" (Domesday), is abbreviated from a long account of the holdings of Harduuinus de Scalariis and Turcus homo abbatis de Ramesio, in the Cotton MS. The ambiguous meaning of "æcclesiæ" is therefore clearly indicated to refer to Ramsey, and not to Ely, as the word so frequently does throughout the work.

At pp. 38–39 we see a curious alteration in the value of the land, which had risen from xv. lib. "quando recepit" and "t. r. e." to xvii. lib., at the time the return was made, and dropped again to xvi. lib. in the Domesday survey.

On page 39 the undefined "comes" of the Domesday is "comes alanus" in the Cottonian MS.; and throughout names and quasi-surnames are frequently found in the Tiberius MS. but not in the Domesday.

On p. 46 a curious reading occurs, where one Fredebertus held a hide and a half "et potuit recedere quo voluit sed soca remanebat harlestone" (Tib.). In the Domesday the soca, or vested interest held by the abbey of Ely in the land, is said "remanere æcclesiæ."

Another example of the superior exactness of the Cottonian MS. is afforded in p. 51, l. 22, where the ambiguous "de comit" of the Domesday, which may be generally considered "de comite," is shewn by the Tiberius to be the representative of "de comitissa iudeta."

There is another instance of this want of precision in the Domesday on p. 79, l. 25. where "comes" is the equivalent for "comes Rogerus" of the Cottonian copy.

Some points of great interest will be occasionally noticed, as at p. 152, where we find a very curious entry touching the marriage of the clergy. "In Randestuna Ædmundus presbiter terram quam accepit cum femina sua dedit Sanctæ Ædeldridæ concedente femina, etc."

Occasionally the abridgement exhibits ambiguous words which may be interpreted aright by a comparison with the original return as in the following examples :—

P. 57, l. 17, "comite" (Domesday,) is shewn to be "comite alano" (Tib.).

P. 62., "Ricardus" (Domesday,) is evidently "Ricardus filius comitis Gilleberti" (Tib.).

P. 77, l. 26, six sochemanni are mentioned in the Domesday, and one specified as homo regis. In the Cottonian MS. the six sochemanni are attributed to their proper lords thus :—Two are homines Edivæ; the third homo of Archbishop Stigand; the fourth of Robert filius Wimarci; the fifth of King Edward; the sixth of comes algarus.

The manuscript from which the text is taken, and which, so far as we know, is the only remaining exemplar, is numbered Tiberius A. vi. among the Cottonian Manuscripts in the British Museum. Its contents are: 1. A copy of the Anglo-Saxon chronicle, to the year 977. 2. A memorandum entitled "De portione crucis reperta a Sergio Papa," etc. 3. "Nomina Paparum qui miserunt pallium archiepiscopis Cantuariensibus ab Augustino ad Anselmum." 4. The "Inquisitio Eliensis." 5. The Inquisition of Cambridgeshire. 6. A collection of charters and early documents relating to the monastery of Ely; and 7. A chronicle of England from Hardacnut to the 20th year of Edward III., in French.

The Inquisition of Cambridgeshire is contained between folios 76 and 113, one folio being lost between 111 and 112. It is written on vellum in double columns, thirty-one lines to a page, and in a fine bold hand of the concluding years of the twelfth century, perhaps about A.D. 1180. It is ornamented with capital letters in blue and red colours, and had occasionally floriated initials. The facsimile of the first folio, containing the Inquisition (f. 76) is a faithful reproduction of the manuscript page. The Ely Inquisition is in the same manuscript, and in the same handwriting, but has been placed before the Cambridgeshire Inquisition. It will be found in folios 38–70.

The following is a description of the two Cambridge manuscripts with which has been collated that portion of the Cottonian Manuscript containing the Inquisitio Eliensis or survey of the possessions of St. Etheldreda's Abbey at Ely, extending into the counties of Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk, Hertford, Huntingdon, and Essex.

B. A manuscript belonging to Trinity College, Cambridge, and numbered in the College catalogue O. 2, 41. It is a small vellum folio and finely written, as will appear by the fac-simile at the beginning of this preface. It belongs to the latter half of the 12th century, and is ornamented with rubrics, and plain initials in red and green.

The contents are :—

1. An early kalendar.

2. The history and privileges of the Church of Ely, the latter being a collection of 55 charters and other documents relating to the abbey.

3. The "Inquisitio Eliensis" commencing at p. 161, and concluding at p. 274. Much additional matter relating to the monastery, but of a somewhat later date, has been inserted upon blank leaves throughout the book.

C. Another MS. in Trinity College, Cambridge, and numbered O. 2. 1. A quarto on vellum of about the same date as the other MS., but not so clearly written, and occasionally irregular. It appears, however, to have been derived from the B. MS. rather than the Cottonian.

The "Inquisitio Eliensis" commences at folio 177 b, and concludes at f. 213 b, additions of a later date being inserted ; and a most interesting account of possessions alleged to be unjustly held away from the abbey (printed at pp. 184–195) is only found in this copy.

Respecting the numerous personages mentioned in the text as tenants, it must suffice to say that notices of the principal landholders exist in Dugdale's Baronage, folio, London, 1675, in which careful references to the original authorities will be found. In Ellis's 'Introduction to the Domesday Book,' names of many Cambridgeshire tenants who held land either in chief or as subtenentes, both in this and other counties, will be found entered in the classified indices therein contained.

A map of the places mentioned in the text has been added, with the view of pointing out the ancient names of localities and divisions still in existence. Many villages and hamlets have, no doubt, disappeared, or gradually acquired new designations, and it has not been possible to identify the whole of the names found in the text. Although imperfect, it is hoped that it will nevertheless prove of considerable assistance to the student.

The full indices appended to the present volume are arranged into three classes, the first contains the names of persons; the second names of places, and the counties in which they are situated, when such notice is given in the text; the third a copious selection of such subjects as are likely to be of special interest to the reader, and to serve in researches of a miscellaneous character. This last index it was thought would be more useful than any general or discursive remarks that could be introduced here. A comparison of the first two indices with the corresponding ones contained in the folio edition of the Domesday Book will show how much additional matter has been acquired through the medium of the Cottonian Manuscript; while it is to be regretted that little or no equivalent to the Index Rerum has been prepared for that edition.

I take the opportunity of appending to the preface several documents from the ancient chartularies of Ely, which refer to the method employed in obtaining the survey, and which cannot fail to strike the reader as being of a very remarkable nature. Many of the individuals mentioned in these charters will be found occurring in the text of the Survey itself, and they were no doubt singled out for the performance of the duties required of them by reason of their being the principal tenants and the most notable men the county had upon its roll.

In conclusion, I beg to offer my respectful thanks to the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, for their courtesy in lending me their two valuable manuscripts, above referred to. And in particular I record my gratitude to Mr. W. Aldis Wright, Fellow and late Librarian of that college, for many acts of friendship and kindness shewn to me in connexion with this and kindred literary pursuits.

To my friend, Mr. James Cotter Morison, I express my hearty thanks for his never-failing readiness to place at my disposal the resources of his great and varied historical acquirements, as well as for the aid and encouragement he has given me at various points of this work.

To my friend and former colleague, Mr. Walter de Gray Birch, of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum, my thanks are due for much general assistance, and also for the compilation of the exhaustive indices which serve as a guide and commentary throughout.

To the Members and Council of the Royal Society of Literature, and especially to their Secretary, Mr. W. S. W. Vaux, I am not only indebted for the opportunity of rescuing a valuable historical document from the manifold and manifest dangers to which it was exposed while remaining in a single manuscript copy, but personally for their great forbearance with me through the long period during which, owing to inevitable hindrances, these pages have lingered in the press.

[1] This chapter respecting the 'piscaria' differs so materially in MSS. A. and B. that it has seemed well to give the complete text of B. in a note. It will be seen that, besides variations of form, B. adds the names of the tenants. C. does not contain the chapter at all.
